Spring is here! It's time to get some shooting in at the ranges while the weather is nice, the bugs are not yet overpowering, and the heat of summer does not cause us to have to shoot with sweat in our eyes. It's a good time to take advantage of the recent time change, because longer days mean more shooting hours before shooting has to stop once the sun goes down late in the day.

Last month there was some discussion of the opportunity to be an ORSA bond-holder, and thereby participate in some ORSA financial planning decisions as well as getting reduced dues. Once again, ORSA bonds cost $100 each and allow bondholders to vote on by-laws changes, and participate in a few operational decisions relative to some capital expenditures such as land acquisition or disposition. As is stated on the ORSA Membership Renewal application form, dues if you hold One Bond = $136, Two Bonds = $126, Three Bonds = $118, Four Bonds = $114, and Five Bonds = $112.

Bondholding members who have reached the age of 65 and hold two bonds (both an A and a B bond as of their membership expiration date) are eligible for an annual membership fee of $25. Bonds do not become available very often. However, if you are interested in becoming a bondholder contact Linda Albrecht the ORSA Secretary at orsasec@gmail.org to get placed on the waiting list.

I am often asked about conducting Orientation on an alternate day from the usual third Wednesday evening of the month. We do have alternative days scheduled occasionally and expect to offer an additional session on a Saturday evening in May for those individuals that have found the regular

Wednesday evening Orientation session to be undoable. The exact day and time will be announced in early May through direct communications with those individuals needing to attend Orientation. In fact, if you are not sure you are familiar with recent changes to ORSA's various ranges and rules you are welcome to attend an Orientation session yourself at any time.

Remember that safe shooting is everyone's responsibility.

ARCHERS

Spring has sprung bringing with a lot of water. The White course is open for business. When the weather is ok we will start shooting again.

With the amount of rain we have had part of the course has standing water. If you choose to shoot it would to your advantage to wear water proof boots or take a John boat.

We will start having work parties again when weather clears up. We will be setting up the open range with more of the large rubber blocks for broadheads and crossbow shooters. We have cleared two ways to get to the cemetery behind the indoor pistol range but there is still work to be done clearing small debris so we can maintain by mowers. We will be looking for other area's to clear more shooting lanes on white course. I'll call when we start work parties.

ORSA SPRING WOBBLE TRAP SHOOT

ORSA Skeet & Trap Club hosted some of Tennessee's finest athletes for the Spring Wobble Tournament on March 31. 27 athletes participated, representing 7 different teams spread across the state.

13 of the participants were in the youngest group (14 & under). It was great to see how the youngest competitors held their own, demonstrated excellent safety responsibility and had so much fun.

5 ORSA members participated, with 3 of them making the finals. Ricky Bustamante, Zachary Maggard and Lacy White entered into the finals and Lacy was able to secure the Silver Medal. Scores were impressive. High gun went to Cole Prince with an 89 and High Lady was Ella McClaren with an 83.

This tournament prepares the athletes for the upcoming Tennessee Junior Olympics, held in Maury County the weekend of April 20th. ORSA has done a fantastic job of supporting these athletes in their quest for excellence and achievement. Local participants can now be seen on the biggest stage (the World Championships) including Crossville's 13 year old phenomenon Carey Garrison and Chattanooga's Eli Christman. Watch them in September go to South Korea and show the world what East Tennessee shooters can do! All are invited to come and watch (or help) at the Fall Wobble Trap event on November 3rd.

Special recognition goes to all the volunteers who made this event so successful: Referees, RSOs, Cooks, Servers and Organizers all put in hours to make this a premier tournament.

IN THEIR OWN WORDS

“Teachers are being trained to shoot their students.”

Patricia J. Williams, law professor at Columbia University School of Law, in an op-ed commenting about the Buckeye Firearms Foundation funding of its FASTER program in which schools select staff members who are willing, competent, and capable of protecting their students.

“...we should not accept anything but the full repeal of the Second Amendment...”

Retired Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens
in an editorial in the NY Times

“Guns do not keep the peace. People with love in their hearts keep the peace. People with fear and hatred in their hearts sometimes use guns to kill other people, whereas people whose hearts are full of love don’t do that... Guns are not designed as a peacekeeping tool; guns are designed to kill. Killing is their sole purpose and usage and therefore cannot be used to keep any sort of peace... The idea that guns are a good tool for peace is an idea that needs to be revealed for what it is: a lie... Some people are so afraid, bigoted, and/or unloving that they feel safe when they have a weapon that could kill other people...”

Op-ed in the Salt Lake Tribune

PARKLAND HIGH SCHOOL SHOOTING AND MARCH FOR OUR LIVES

In the almost crazed zeal to “do something” after another school shooting the mass media and the gun control crowd are full-throated in their demands. There are poll after poll touted that Americans back “strict background checks,” “universal background checks,” “close the gun show and internet loopholes,” and “stricter gun laws.” In the Knox News Sentinel on 13 April there was an article “MTSU poll: Majority of Tennesseans back stricter gun laws.”

A word or two about polling: it is all in how the pollsters craft the questions and many polls are designed to create a desired outcome and finally polls are designed to move public opinion. Think about all the polls that predicted a landslide victory for Hillary Clinton. Therefore I put little credence in the MTSU poll that a majority of Tennesseans favor stricter gun laws.

After every mass shooting the gun controllers are speechless when asked “what gun law would have prevented this shooting?” Stricter gun laws are not the solution.

The gun control cabal views the Parkland shooting as THE opportunity to finally pass real gun control. The leaders of anti-gun rights movements talk about “gun safety,” “gun-violence prevention,” “reasonable and common sense gun control,” “expanded background checks,” and “gun control to keep our children safe.” These terms are politically correct and nice sounding for how could one oppose “common sense gun control.” However Justice Stevens let the cat out of the bag – the real objective is to repeal the Second Amendment. The real purpose of every anti-gun rights group, the political left, and the mass media is to demonize and criminalize guns and gun owners.

GUN CONTROL PUSH SUCCESSFUL IN INCREASING GUN SALES

Nearly 2.8 million gun-purchase background checks were processed last month, according to FBI data released Tuesday – an indication that renewed talk of gun control in the wake of February’s Parkland school massacre is fueling a record nationwide firearms buying spree.

Close to 335,000 more checks were run through the National Instant Criminal Background Check System (NICS) last month compared to a year earlier. That’s the biggest year-over-year monthly increase since President Obama left office. Washington Times April, 4, 2018

CONTINUING OUR STUDY OF “THE RIGHT TO ARMS AND THE AMERICAN PHILOSOPHY OF FREEDOM” BY NELSON LUND, PH.D.

The authoritarian impulse is most conspicuous among elite proponents of gun control.

The vast majority of these people are quite well insulated from the threat of criminal violence. They reside in low-crime neighborhoods and work in well-protected office buildings. They live, work, and vacation with peaceable individuals who are very much like themselves. At the pinnacle of the ruling class, proponents of gun control like Barack Obama, George W. Bush, and Bill and Hillary Clinton have squads of heavily armed bodyguards who will protect them for the rest of their lives. And most people in the upper middle class can safely advocate the disarmament of their less fortunate fellow citizens without fear that such regulations will have any significant effect on themselves.

When gun-control advocates do think they may encounter threats to their own safety, their behavior often does not match their political rhetoric. Former Chief Justice Warren Burger, for example, who had been known to answer a knock at his door by appearing with a gun in his hand, also said, “If I were writing the Bill of Rights now there wouldn’t be any such thing as the Second Amendment.” Senator Edward M. Kennedy, for decades a leading supporter of severe restrictions on the private possession of firearms, inadvertently revealed his own reliance on guns when his private bodyguard was charged with carrying illegal weapons in the Capitol.

In 1994, Congress enacted a statute, supported by many politically appointed police chiefs, that banned the sale of certain so-called assault weapons. Although the advertised rationale was that these arms do not have legitimate civilian purposes, the law created an exception for retired police officers, who could hardly have any more need for such weapons than other law-abiding citizens.

When it comes to gun control, however, it is hard to see much personal benefit for our elites beyond the sheer joy of exercising the will to power over people they regard as intellectually and morally backward.

As a crime-control measure, restricting access to weapons by law-abiding citizens is a proven failure. To his credit, the conservative Charles Krauthammer candidly declares that he wants to impose useless regulations that will desensitize the public in order to prepare the way for total confiscation. Many other gun-control advocates are simply more politic (or duplicitous). Once they achieve their real goal, we will see a lot more of what existing regulations have already accomplished: The most vulnerable people—especially women, minorities, and elderly people who live in low-rent locales—will increasingly be at the mercy of predatory men who either will have illegal weapons or will not need to use guns against their physically weaker victims. There will also be a demand for ever bigger and more intrusive police bureaucracies. Many elite proponents of gun control probably do not much care about the first effect, safe as they are and will be in their cocoons of privilege. Bigger bureaucracies, for their part, are always the default solution for those who expect to control them.

If the regulatory elite's authoritarian agenda promises more of what has already proved to be a failure, the moral effects on the general population are likely to be even worse. Much of the propaganda against guns is calculated to foster cowardice, passivity, and irresponsible reliance on the government. This is the effect that should most worry Americans who are committed to our nation's founding principles. A few examples may help to illustrate the point.

Many police chiefs have been warning people for years that firearms are useless for self-defense because criminals will take them away and turn the guns on the victims. They never produce evidence to support this theory, and they obviously disregard it themselves: They carry guns on and off duty and lobby for the right to do so after they have retired. Nor can one imagine they would actually try to grab a gun that someone was pointing at them. The police know very well that this sort of thing almost never happens outside of the movies. In the real world, robbery victims are less likely to be injured if they defend themselves with a gun than if they passively comply with the robber's demand.

One can easily imagine why law enforcement bureaucrats would want to discourage crime victims from displaying courage and self-reliance. It is harder to see why the victims of crime should allow themselves to be tricked into mistaking cowardice for prudence.

Even U.S. military leaders have succumbed to the kind of magical thinking that afflicts so many supporters of gun control. Major Nidal Hasan was able to shoot dozens of service members at Fort Hood in Texas because the Army had helpfully provided him with a "gun free zone." Rather than treat the incident as vivid confirmation of Beccaria's irrefutable analysis, the Department of Defense called it an "isolated and tragic case" and classified the massacre as a case of "workplace violence."

Six years later, Muhammad Youssef Abdulazeez opened fire at two "gun free" military recruiting stations in Chattanooga, Tennessee, killing four Marines and one sailor and wounding several other people. The Marine Corps ruled out arming its recruiters on the bizarre rationale that their job primarily involves interactions with the public.

These incidents, like almost all civilian massacres, took place in designated "gun free zones." Last year, a similar incident occurred in San Bernadino, California, in one of those government buildings that the Supreme Court has called "sensitive places" where the Second Amendment is presumptively inapplicable. Syed Rizwan Farook and Tashfeen Malik killed 14 people and seriously injured 22. The police arrived within four minutes, but by that time, it was over. President Obama had a ready response, calling once again for "common sense" gun safety laws. Similarly, The New York Times published a front-page editorial—the first in almost a century—with a familiar refrain: "Are these atrocities truly beyond the power of government and its politicians to stop? That tragically has been the case as political leaders offer little more than platitudes after each shootout, while the nation is left to numbly anticipate the next killing spree."

It is true that many politicians have nothing to offer but platitudes, but The Times called for "firm action" without explaining exactly what that firm action would be. This is worse than trite because the usual gun-control nostrums would not have prevented this shooting. If editorial writers in Manhattan are left numb by such incidents, that is preferable to the numbness that will spread throughout the nation if the government succeeds in desensitizing the population in preparation for total civilian disarmament.

The time is gone when Americans universally supported gun rights, but the American spirit of independence has not disappeared. The invisible deterrent effect of armed citizens cannot be measured directly, but it undoubtedly exists.

Whatever the exact magnitude of this crime prevention effect may be, law-abiding citizens who arm themselves are exhibiting the moral temper appropriate to a free people. They do not regard their lives and safety as a gift from the government. Nor do they think they should wait for the government to come along and save them when their lives or the lives of other innocent people are threatened. When that spirit is finally squashed, bureaucratic government will continue to expand, violent crime will continue to plague our most vulnerable citizens, and genuine self-government—both personal and political—will become ever more illusory.

—Nelson Lund, JD, PhD, is University Professor at George Mason University's Antonin Scalia Law School.
